The Best of American Road Cycling in 2007

By Bob Beane

These days, the so-called noteworthy "sound bites" seem substantially slanted to the negative. This was definitely true for the cycling world in 2007. More accusations, more suspensions, more arguments between organizations at the "top" of the sport...more of us just wondering when the focus will return to riding and racing versus who is clean and who is not, and who is in charge. Looking back, though, there are a number of highlights from the past year that I will remember that are on a much more positive note. Here are my nominations for the best of American road cycling in 2007:

- Three Major American Tours – For the first time, ever, there were three top-tier week-long races held in America. In terms of building a fan base and demonstrating the positive economic impact of a major sporting event that doesn't require a ticket for admission, this is great news! Even though the planned Tour of Utah failed to materialize, the tours of California (2nd year), Georgia (5th year) and Missouri (1st year) provided cycling fans across the country an opportunity to see top stars of the sport "up close and personal". And, this all happened in a post-Lance Armstrong era. The second annual Tour of California provided an early season stage for a dramatic battle between powerhouse teams CSC and Discovery Channel, with the end result being a GC victory by Levi Leipheimer of DC, and the overall team title to CSC. The fifth year "veteran" Tour of Georgia provided a venue for a continuation of that battle. A strong showing by domestic Heath Net-Maxxis added to the team competition mix. And, the fledgling Tour of Missouri surprised riders with its difficulty, organizers with its attendance and provided a platform for the Discovery Channel swan-song and a popular overall GC win by fan favorite George Hincapie.
- More TV Coverage – With more high level tours, there was more coverage of cycling on Versus this year. But, that's not all. The U.S. Open Cycling Championship was aired on network television in April. And, as the Internet continues its role as an advertising and promotional tool, there are now at least a half dozen sites that broadcast pro races throughout the year.
- Levi Rises to the Top – Levi Leipheimer finally broke out of the shadow of Lance Armstrong, winning two TT stages and the GC in California, the Brasstown Bald stage in Georgia, the U.S. Pro Championship, a TT stage in Missouri, and the final TT stage and 3rd overall in the Tour de France (only 31 seconds behind winner and team mate Alberto Contador).
- Turning the Page – After 17 years as a pro, Scott Moninger retired quietly in September after competing in the inaugural Tour of Missouri. As reported in VeloNews, Moninger competed in approximately 3,000 races during his career, and garnered 275 wins. He was the top-ranked American racer twice during his career, once with Coors Light in 1992 and again with Health Net-Maxxis in 2005. Moninger made the podium of the Mt. Evans Hill Climb 14 of 17 times he raced that event, winning it six times. And, in his final season, at age 41, he finished 3rd in the Tour of the Gila and won a stage at the Redlands Bicycle Classic. One of his most memorable wins was the 2000 Zinger Bicycle Classic, where he endured an alpine storm and rode a mountain bike down the rough Guanella Pass descent to a finishing hero's welcome.
- New Hope for the Future – Along with MTB pal Danny Summerhill, 18, who took silver at the World Junior Cyclocross Championship, the 17 year-old Taylor Phinney (son of Davis and Connie Carpenter-Phinney, both past cycling champions) burst on the scene this year as a great new hope for American cycling. Phinney began the season with a virtual tie for the Cat 2 win in the Tour of the Gila, then won the national pursuit title in his first-ever velodrome race and won the 2007 World junior TT competition. Among the women, Boulder, CO, native Mara Abbott won the national elite road and U23 TT titles, the overall of the Tour of the Gila, and finished 2nd at the Montreal World Cup.

As opposed to what usually is reported about cycling, these are the kinds of stories I like to hear and read...

2008 Tour of California...Only Seven Weeks Away!!!

This is your closest and best chance to see a "top ten", world-class pro bicycle tour. The 3rd annual Tour of California will take place from February 17-24 between Palo Alto and Pasadena. If you want to attend, you should plan now, especially if you wish to take part in a VIP car ride, dinner with a team, cyclist "meet & greet" and/or VIP hospitality areas at each finish, all of which can be arranged (for a fee). Information and reservations are available by contacting bwatson@amgentourofcalifornia.com or calling 213-742-7388. If you cannot make it to one or more stages of the race (which your editor highly recommends doing, based on his experience of the last two years), the Versus TV schedule follows on Page 2...More info at www.amgentourofcalifornia.com.

Message from the new PMBC president, Ron Waller...

As your new President I want to extend best wishes and a safe and Happy Holiday to you and your families. We have an excellent organization in P.M.B.C. Everyone of us has personal reasons why we ride a bike. Fun, competition, health, a desire to challenge one's-self; whatever your reason we appreciate your being a member of P.M.B.C. One of the things which makes an organization succeed are its volunteers. We have many events which can use your help and support. Do it, it pays very large dividends. If you're not sure of what you can do, ask one of your board members.

P.M.B.C. is a diverse organization. Are you aware our members include a "state cycling champion?" We have members who have raced on a national basis. Our members also include those who give tirelessly to various charities and causes. Whether it is riding miles for dollars or volunteering their time, they want to help others. Some of our members are also happy to just ride. Not how far or how fast... just ride. On your next ride say "HI" to someone who you don't know. Offer encouragement or a kind word.

How many of you are 50 or over? Are you aware that every February in Phoenix the Arizona Senior Games are held? There are many sporting events, including cycling (held in Ahwatukee). If interested go to www.seniorgames.org and check it out. Some of our club members did well enough to qualify for the National Games. Don't laugh; you would be surprised at what some of those "seniors" can accomplish.

I am going to ask one thing from each of you. Tell us something about yourself. Why do you ride? Who are you? I'll start. I have been cycling for over 20 years. I'm 58 years old, married and have two adult kids. So far this year I have ridden 6,508 miles. Totals miles in my cycling career? Don't know - a lot. I started out racing and had a very unsuccessful career – but a lot of fun. Had the benefit of training with some very good pros. John Eustace was my favorite; very patient, kind, soft spoken – a lot like me. So tell us about yourself. Send me a note at ronwaller@cox.net.

Ride smooth...be safe.

Winter Wellness Tips...Submitted by "Doctor" Glen Fletcher

QUICK & SIMPLE TIPS FOR FIGHTING ILLNESS & COLDS:

It's that time of year, and if you have children, it is even more of an opportunity to get a cold or flu. Below are some tips to help...

1. KNOW WHEN TO TAKE A REST

Maintaining fitness is great, but not at the expense of your health.

Monitor how you feel, and the stress you have from work & life. If you feel sick, fatigued, or just not right, take a break. You will be better off than getting real sick, and everyone else around you will thank you as well.

2. TAKE SOME VITAMINS - EAT RIGHT

Use any multi-vitamin or check out Airborne, great stuff. Even if it doesn't work 100%, you are getting some great vitamins and such. In addition, just eating right may stay off a cold. Avoid the bad stuff (you know what they are) and eat more veggies and fruit, you know, the stuff your mom told you to eat to be big and strong.

3. KEEP IT CLEAN!

Make sure you keep things as clean as you can. Washing your hands and using hand sanitizer. Keep your water bottles clean and if you carry one around with you, try to swap it out for a fresh one every other day at most.

The key is being aware of yourself and knowing when you need to take a break before you get sick. However, if you do get sick, accept it and you will get better faster!

QUESTION: Why do Arizona cyclists ride Centuries in January? ANSWER: Because they can!

Remember where you used to live? The closest you came to riding a Century in January was trying to get your old Buick started when it was 5 below. So join us January 6 for the first century of the new year. Then call all your friends in North Dakota and tell them what a good time you had!

This ride is a great first century or metric century. The terrain is flat, the roads have low traffic, and if history repeats itself, the weather is sunny with a high of 70. What more could you want? Try two sag stops with water, fruit and snacks, as well as a hot BBQ lunch at Dave White Regional Park in Casa Grande. You'll also get a route map, commemorative socks and a raffle ticket for lots of bike-related prizes. Join 200-plus cycling friends for PMBC's biggest ride of the year!

New to cycling or club rides? Try our new 34-mile option. You'll get one sag stop, a route map and commemorative socks.

There will be three ride options: A Full Century (100 miles), a Metric Century (62 miles) and a 34 mile ride. The 34-mile ride is out-and-back and flat. The 62-mile ride is out-and-back, with a slight hill. The 100-mile ride is mainly a loop and flat.

Vehicles will be available to collect those suffering from physical, mechanical or mental breakdowns.

All Athletes: 'Tis the Season to Shake Things Up... © 2007 by Dirk Friel

This is the time of year athletes reflect on the past and make plans to improve performances in the coming year. No matter how last season stacked up for you, this is the time to plan for the future so that next year is something special. Focusing your training time on things that really matter and making consistency your highest priority can make you a champion come next summer.

Here are some common issues athletes mention when they do year-end reviews. If these sound familiar to you, consider introducing new training practices to break through and reach new heights.

THE ETERNAL PLATEAU: Our bodies adapt and get used to regular training in amazing ways. However, adaptations over time can leave you stagnant and wishing for more. Training the same way day in and day out for months on end will cause lackluster personal performances. If you have been following the same regime for longer than you can remember you have probably reached a plateau well below your potential.

THE FIX: Mix things up and add a new twist to your training. New training stimuli can do wonders for your fitness and results. Try getting fresh ideas from a coach or respected athlete who can jump start your training methods. A qualified coach can review your training data such as heart rate and/or power files to spot trends and give you a clear and objective analysis of your past training. Hopefully you can walk away with a fresh perspective and a new formula for success.

Simple changes in your aerobic-building base training such as introducing new modes of exercise can help you develop aerobically and muscularly in productive ways. Consider adding some of the following modes of exercise to your routine: fixed gear biking, hiking, snowshoeing, cyclocross, Nordic skiing, etc.

LACK OF RECOVERY: Do you never feel fresh after hard workouts or suffer from lingering muscle soreness? Mood swings can also be an indicator of overtraining and reduced ability to recover as quickly as possible.

THE FIX: More sleep. How many hours a night do you sleep? Eight hours of sleep is a minimum amount athletes should get per night. Sleep is crucial for building fitness, repairing muscles and staying healthy. Simply developing a nightly routine can be an enormous training advantage during the competitive season.

If you are already getting enough quality sleep each night, consider adding an occasional nap. A short nap of 20-30 minutes can physically and mentally prepare you for the following day's workout by helping to speed up the recovery process and release more natural human growth hormone.

UNCOMFORTABLE ON THE BIKE: Are you consistently uncomfortable on the bike with a sore neck, back, saddle sores and more? Or do your hands and feet go numb even on the shortest of rides?

THE FIX: Get a full bio-mechanical evaluation. In other words, a good bike fit. A sore neck, back, numb hands and feet are clear signs something is not optimal with your bike fit and possibly your foot and knee alignment. Seek out a qualified bike fit expert that has knowledge of foot and knee alignment issues. There are only three primary weight bearing points of contact on a bike and they are the pedals and saddle. Surprisingly many comfort issues on the bike have their place of origin at the foot and pedal, which are often times ignored within a bike fit.

Even the best elite cyclists go back to basics and get a bike fit conducted once a year. Continued inefficient movement won't help you reach your performance potential. Improper movement can dramatically increase injuries and frustration. If significant changes are needed, then the preparation period is the best time to experiment. But be careful when introducing any intensity with a new position. Back or other muscle pain is likely since even proper positioning changes cause muscles to realign and adapt.

FREQUENT ILLNESS OR FATIGUE: Do you frequently get sick or run down and have no energy to train?

THE FIX: Get a blood test and meet with a dietitian. The off season is one of the best times of the year to make dietary changes and meet with your doctor concerning a complete blood profile. Having a blood test taken during the off season ensures you have baseline data to go from if things start to go wrong later in the competitive season. If you or your doctor don't like the results, investigate the causes and plan a diet analysis. This usually requires three days of keeping a diet log and a follow-up consultation with a dietitian. If changes are needed, it usually takes at least three weeks to see results of a new diet. Consequences, good or bad, can be observed and are safer to make this time of year, rather than during a hectic and stressful race season.

No matter if 2007 was a successful season or a complete flop. Change is good and can inject a much needed spark to you fitness and 2008 results.

Happy Holidays!
